John Braime - Manager of the UCLU Volunteering Services Unit

Q: What is volunteering about?

Volunteering is about connecting students with the community. London is a busy and multicultural city worth exploring; volunteering gives students the opportunity to become part of the London community.

Volunteering is about helping other people but also about helping you. Students who get involved with voluntary work often tell me that helping others makes them happier, enhances their confidence and skills, and helps them meet new people.

Q: What is your advice to students who think that they are too busy with their studies to get involved with volunteering?

The Volunteering Services Unit offers about 300 different activities with 10-20 new opportunities coming in every week. We run a very big one-off programme so even students who cannot make a regular commitment can get involved. Some students volunteer just one afternoon a year and others get really involved and put a lot of hours into it. Our service is very flexible and we try to meet the individual needs of each student.

Q: How can students register with the Volunteering Services Unit?

We try to make registering with us as easy as possible for the students. They can send us an email to volunteering@ucl.ac.uk, come to our office in the Lewis's Building any time or come along to one of our drop-in sessions on Tuesdays and Fridays between 1pm – 4pm. Students can sign up to receive our Newsletter by emailing us at volunteering@ucl.ac.uk to stay up to date with the new volunteering opportunities that come in.

Q: Can you name some of the volunteering recruiters who you work with?

We work with around 300 charities, including The British Heart Foundation, Oxfam, Keen London and many others. Students can get involved with projects such as Beat Bullying to support school children who have suffered bullying or work with Westminster Befriend A Family to support refugee families. We have also worked with some graduate recruiters who run community challenge type events, such as Morgan Stanley and PricewaterhouseCoopers.

Q: Can the Volunteering Services Unit support students who have an idea how to help the local community?

Yes, students can receive funds of up to £750 and training to devise their own community project. For instance, we have provided such support to a group of maths students who organised a maths competition for primary school children. We have also supported VIBE – which aims is to create opportunities for befriending people who have visual impairments and Sew Fair, a Fair Trade and fashion recycled project run by the Fashion Society for primary school children.

Q: In your opinion, does volunteering improve student's career prospective?

Graduate recruiters tell us that they value volunteering as it helps distinguish candidates who are confident, organised and have the ability to relate to other people. Volunteering is also a way for students to develop skills and discover things that they really enjoy and are good at.

Careers:

To find out more about the skills employers want and how to prove you have them, download What do graduates do? or visit the UCL Careers service.

The top 3 types of skills most employers want to see

Skills. Competencies. Values. Requirements. Employers call them all sorts of different things within their job advertisements. What it all means is these are things an employer wants of their 'ideal' employee. This is quite a UK based way of recruiting staff, so what are these skills and what is the best way to show you have them? Research has shown that the top 3 types of skills most employers want to see are:

Self-reliance Skills – being proactive, networking, taking action, motivated and enthusiastic
People Skills – team working, communication, negotiation, customer service and presenting
General Employment Skills – IT skills, problem solving, analytical skills, flexibility and commercial awareness

Employers often tell us at the careers service that graduates have problems proving to them that they do have these skills. The recent Futuretrack study has also confirmed that graduates think their skill levels are higher than what employers believe they are.

So what is the best way to show an employer you've got the ability to do their job? Tell them stories, providing lots of action words that give the employer evidence you have what they need. A handy acronym to this is the STAR format. Firstly, explain the Situation and the Task you had to do. Then go on to spend the majority of your time talking about the Actions that you took to achieve the Result. For example if you were asked to show initiative a good story may be:

- S: I worked at the Museum of London in Summer 2011 and
- T: was asked to help increase visits to the events page of their website.
- A: I conducted an audit of similar sites and presented my findings to the development team, recommending the use of 'pop-ups' to advertise forthcoming events. Mindful of industry scepticism regarding their use, I researched available data and prepared visual design ideas. Despite their initial concerns, I persuaded them to allocate funds for an initial trial period.
- R: Click-through rates were encouraging and the pop-ups are now a permanent addition to the website. This process taught me that by showing initiative and constructing a solid argument for an idea I can achieve set tasks.

Culture:

Picasso & Modern British Art is on until 15 July 2012.

Tickets cost £14 but with a valid UCL student card you can purchase tickets at £12.20 per person.

If you are a member of the Tate you can go in for free.

Picasso & Modern British Art

Picasso & Modern British Art opened on 15th February at Tate Britain. The exhibition explores Picasso's lifelong connections with Great Britain and his impact on British modernism and on artists such as Wyndham Lewis, Francis Bacon and David Hockney. There are more than 160 works on display of which at least 60 are Picasso's own works from different periods of his life.

Highlights of the exhibition include Picasso's Nude Woman in a Red Armchair (1932) and Nude, Green leaves and Bust (1932). In 2010 Nude, Green leaves and Bust, based on Picasso's muse Marie-Therese Walter, was sold for £70m making it the world's most expensive painting ever sold at auction.

You will also be able to see a reproduction of Guernica (1937), Picasso's protest at the bombing of the Basque city of Guernica during the Spanish Civil War (1936-1939). The original work is displayed at Museo Nacional Centro de Arte Reina Sofia in Madrid.

In the last room, you will find The Three Dancers (1925), Picasso considered this to be one of his two greatest works alongside Les Femmes d'Alger \(O.J.\) (1911-1914) - displayed in the Museum of Modern Arts, New York. Picasso sold The Three Dancers to the Tate Gallery in 1965.

Enjoy!

The Times Stephen Spender Prize for poetry in translation

The annual Times Stephen Spender Prize for poetry in translation celebrates the often under-rated art of literary translation. Entrants translate a poem from any language, modern or classical, and submit the original poem with their translation and a commentary of not more than 300 words in which they consider the translation process and justify their decisions regarding metre, rhyme and vocabulary (guidelines for the commentary can be found along with the rules and entry forms at the Stephen Spender website .

There are three categories – 14-and-under, 18-and-under and Open – with prizes in each category, the best entries being published in The Times newspaper and in a commemorative booklet produced by the Trust. Because the competition is not language-specific, it has been restricted to UK citizens and residents, though the latter includes anyone studying in the UK.

The judges enjoy the variety of the entries, not only the linguistic range (in 2011, some 43 languages were represented) but also the choice of poem. Some are familiar poems, justly famous, which bring with them their own problems – how do you make them new and fresh and improve on existing translations? – while others may be by poets unknown to the judges. Some are extracts from epic poems, while others are as brief as the Catullus ode, 'Odio et amo', which was presented as a text message: 'I h8 + I luv. / Y, u may ask. I dunno. /But 'strue + kills me.' We look forward to seeing what 2012 brings.

The closing date for this year's entries is Friday 1 June 2012.

Good luck!

Academic Technology Approval Scheme (ATAS)

The UK Border Agency amended the rules in relation to ATAS from 1 October 2011 to increase the range and level of programmes requiring ATAS clearance. These amendments will affect you if you intend to start a course or extend your leave to complete a programme of study on or after 1 January 2012 and your CAS was issued on or after 1 October 2011. You will also need to apply for a new ATAS clearance if you are changing your course or institution.

You will be required to obtain an ATAS clearance certificate if you are a Tier 4 student and your CAS letter indicates that you need ATAS clearance to study on a programme at UCL. The full list of four year undergraduate, research and taught masters programmes requiring ATAS clearance is available on the UCL website and is subject to change at short notice, in line with changes to the immigration rules.

The Foreign and Commonwealth Office (FCO) who is responsible for issuing ATAS certificates, aims to process applications within four weeks of the date of receipt. If you are looking to extend your current leave, you need to have received your ATAS clearance before submitting your immigration application. If you are using the batch scheme run by the UCLU Rights & Advice Centre, you may be able to submit your application to the UK Border Agency when your ATAS clearance is still pending.

The Student Centre is on the Ground Floor of the Chadwick Building, Bloomsbury Map, reference 3C

The opening times are Monday to Friday 10am – 4pm. You may find it most convenient to call in on a Wednesday afternoon.

Visa checking

It is a condition of your Tier 4 visa that you bring your visa to the Student Centre for it to be copied and stored on your file and your electronic record to be updated. Please do remember that if you have recently been issued with a new visa you must bring it in with your passport as soon as you can.

Sessions to check the visas of those students who were not required to show them as a part of the enrolment process this year will be put in place soon. They will be for those of you with Tier 4 visas who re-enrolled for the second or subsequent year of your programme on-line via Portico in the summer. Reminders about this will be sent out shortly by email so do please remember to act on this as soon as you can.

It is also important that if your current visa expires before the end of your programme you allow plenty of time to apply for an extension. You'll find information on how to do this on the Current student's webpage.
