Professor Richard Blundell receives this award, together with Professor David Card from University of California at Berkeley, for contributions in empirical microeconomics and public policy. “Motivated by important empirical questions, they (and their various coauthors) developed and estimated appropriate econometric... models, making significant methodological contributions in the process. Both Blundell and Card are known for their attention to institutional detail, careful and innovative research design, rigorous application of econometric tools, and dispassionate reporting of results.” Nobel Prizewinner Professor Eric Maskin of Harvard University, Chair of the Jury for the 2015 Award.

Richard Blundell is the Ricardo Professor of Political Economy at University College London and Research Director at the Institute for Fiscal Studies in London. Contact details http://www.ucl.ac.uk/~uctp39a/
