

Sensing the city

© Sofia Whilby

Young people and regeneration in London

Cities are endlessly changing but who is change for? How do young people feel about regeneration of their neighbourhoods? How can we ensure young residents have a voice - and are heard - in critical planning decisions that affect their lives and their communities?

Sensing the City: Young People and Regeneration in London is an experimental collaborative project between The Bartlett Development Planning Unit's Barbara Lipietz, Pempeople, The Ubele Initiative and multi-media artists Kat François and Daniel Oduntan to explore the role of creative expression in amplifying the voice of young adults in community-led approaches to planning in London.

Poems and footage contributions from (and with gratitude to): Tyreece Asamoah, Romey Skye, Eliseo, Faruq Hashi, Jaffar Aly @thatspaghetibrand, Kelsea Delatango @_delatango, Sofia Whilby @sofiawhilby, Mattia Guarnera @mattia.guarnera, Alka Suralia @alkacin0, Shay casonova @shaycasonova, Hammed Oyefuwa @hammed_oy and Kadz Woods @kadzwoods.