

WASPS

This coming March, following the success of our last Aristophanes' production, the "Thesmophoriazousai", the Department of Greek and Latin at University College London, will be staging Aristophanes' comedy, the WASPS. The play will again be performed at the Bloomsbury Theatre in English translation.

This year we have employed the expertise of Mr Andrew Arnold, a professional director of some considerable experience. Two students in the department will be acting as his assistant directors. Mr Arnold was last involved with the U.C.L. Greek play in 1987, when he directed, with great success, Aeschylus' "Agamemnon", which later went on to tour in America.

Please find enclosed a booking form and further information concerning the fourth London Festival of Greek Drama.
