

Ability to manage endings

An ability to signal the ending of the intervention at appropriate points during the therapy (e.g. when agreeing the treatment contract, and especially as the intervention draws to close) in a way which acknowledges the potential importance of this transition for the client
--

An ability to help client discuss their feelings and thoughts about endings and any anxieties about managing alone
--

An ability to review the work undertaken together

An ability to say goodbye
