The design of elegant structures emerges from the ‘design workshop’ approach where engineer and architect work in a team from the start of a project. It is the basis of an exploratory process in which hand sketching enables the generation and evaluation of a breadth of options for structural form and material. Tony’s reputation for this is well known. In this the first Kenneth Kemp Bequest Lecture Tony Hunt, IStructE Fellow and Gold Medallist, illustrates his methods and desires in design by fine examples from his practice many of which are landmarks in the progress of style over a 40-year period.

Ken Kemp, who was Head of the Department of Civil & Environmental Engineering at UCL from 1970 to 1985, died in 2002, his will included a generous bequest to further the understanding of design. He was also an enthusiastic Fellow of the Institution of Structural Engineers, and UCL and IStructE have joined together to sponsor a series of biennial lectures by distinguished professional designers, of which this is the first.
