

INDEX TO THE NAMED SHABTIS IN THE PETRIE MUSEUM OF EGYPTIAN ARCHAEOLOGY AT UNIVERSITY COLLEGE LONDON

Introduction

The collection of Egyptian antiquities assembled by Sir W.M.F. Petrie at University College London was built around a nucleus of material bequeathed to the College by Amelia Edwards, and was supplemented by finds from Petrie's own excavations and by purchases from dealers. Like the other genre catalogues written by him for the collection his Shabtis (BSAE 57, London, 1935, reprinted Warminster, 1974) was conceived primarily as a typological study, and could not be revised to take account of later accessions without misrepresenting the author's purpose. Ironically, since the introductory chapters have now dated somewhat, it is the catalogue element that remains the most useful. Some examples included here were omitted by Petrie, perhaps in order to avoid over-representation of certain types and periods. The most important of later acquisitions, notably from the Sudan Government's Antiquities Service and the Trustees of Sir Henry Wellcome, have already been published or are duplicated elsewhere, and this index is intended simply as a record of current holdings with minimal description, unpublished items being related tacitly to the period stereotypes outlined below, and only significant differences mentioned. Unless specified otherwise, all the figures are mummiform. Height (H) is in centimetres.

Middle Kingdom to end of New Kingdom

Shabtis of this period show the individuality which preceded mass-production, and are distinguished by a wider range of materials, forms and iconography, and often larger sizes. The earliest named examples in the present collection are of the Second Intermediate Period. Most are mummiform, but some of New Kingdom date are in the dress of daily life, which was not at first associated with the reis (overseer) function. In the absence of any statement to the contrary the implied style of the latter period is mummiform, beardless, with lappet wig, two hoes held in front and a bag or basket slung behind. The inscription, if in lines, normally contains a version of the traditional shabti text or, if in one column, merely identifies the owner as 'the Osiris N.'

Third Intermediate Period

The statuettes were mass-produced in faience, pottery or clay, and in either mummy or reis form. Generally the former hold two hoes with a bag slung centrally at the back. The reis figures are in the dress of daily life with short kilt, often projecting exaggeratedly in front, and have a whip in one hand, the free arm hanging down. Shabtis of the period usually wear a lappet wig with seshed headband knotted behind. Details and inscriptions are most often painted only, the text being abbreviated typically to a single column in front.

Late Period

Apart from a brief revival of stone as shabti material during the Twenty-fifth Dynasty the common stereotype of the Late Period is in glazed faience, mummiform with plaited Osirian beard, a back pillar and a plinth. One of the two hoes is replaced by a pick, and instead of the basket carried on the back there is a small seed-bag slung over one shoulder. In examples dating to Dynasties 27-30 the usual disposition of text incised in horizontal lines or in a column or two is often replaced by a T-form consisting of a single line with a column beneath. Although worker shabtis continue to appear in mummiform sets, the reis figure is discarded.

LATE DYN. 17 - EARLY DYN. 18

Thirty-six crudely carved wooden shabtis in peg form with inscriptions in black ink. From Dra Abu'l Naga. For a general account and bibliography see Schneider, Shabtis I, 296-8. The numbering of items in Petrie, Shabtis, pl. 26 is confused. It would appear that after the bottom row of numbered shabtis had been arranged, the unnumbered example was inserted between 41 and 42. In pl. 7 (inscriptions) this added item was called 42, and the subsequent four numbers were advanced by one to make 43-46, but without amending pl. 26. (This would have been awkward, for some of the original numbers inked on the objects were visible in the photographs.) The new numbers were, however, used elsewhere in the text and in the index of personal names. See the asterisked items below.
